"After seeing the devastating impact of Covid-19 on the hospitality industry, it's been especially fulfilling to see so many hoteliers from around the world gather in London to celebrate each other's achievements under one roof for the first-ever awards ceremony of The World's 50 Best Hotels," Tim Brooke-Webb, managing director for the World's 50 Best Hotels, said in a statement.

"Our heartfelt congratulations go out to each and every hotel on the list, and we hope this list inspires travel lovers to book somewhere truly spectacular for their next trip."

The World's Best Hotel list is decided by the World's 50 Best Hotel Academy, which is made up of 580 hotel industry experts, including hoteliers and travel journalists, from across the globe.
